We Have Secured by Special Purchase a Variety of
NEW MOURNING DRESSES AND WAISTS

Priced from 1-3 to 1-2 Less Than Usual Valuations.

It is entirely unnecessary for us to dwell upon the need of Mourning Apparel being fashioned with exactness. But we do want to say that this special line is perfect in style and material. It is a most attractive opportunity for those who wear black at any time.

Cape, Crepe de Chine, Crepe Meteor and Silk Poplin are the materials, trimmed with net quilling and shadow lace in a manner that is strictly within the confines of propriety. Evening and Afternoon Dresses, made with draped tunic skirts, and the waists have corded seams with the new large kimono and set-in sleeves. High and low neck styles with long and short sleeves.

The waists are made in a variety of styles, affording an assortment unusual in its allowance of choice for an occasion of this kind. Modes that will be appreciated for their refinement and individuality. Of particular pleasing effect is the new bolero waist, with bolero over soft vest of crepe.

Artist Snubbed Because Of Art Heresy, He Says

Leonard M. Davis, Now Exhibiting at Hubbard Memorial Hall, Declares New Methods Have Barred Pictures From Corcoran and Other Galleries.

Because he is a heretic, a secessionist of the most strenuous type, a rank outsider in his conception of the principles of the art of the old masters, the artists in art, those who paint according to the rules and regulations laid down by the accepted school, do not recognize the work of Leonard M. Davis, whose paintings of Alaskan scenery were placed on exhibition at Hubbard Memorial Hall yesterday, as belonging within the purview of their official notice.

This is what Mr. Davis said himself, and the sole reason for the snub administered to his art is that he uses the palette knife in applying his colors to the canvas instead of the conventional brush. Mr. Davis has studied under the best-known artists in Paris, where his work caused a sensation among art connoisseurs, who said it was "the devil's art" in painting—that is, the very latest in art, putting to rest as it did the cubists, the futurists, the monists, and similar advanced schools.

Because of his nonadherence to legitimate methods, his paintings were refused admission for exhibition at the New York and Philadelphia academies, and the Corcoran Gallery of Art likewise declined the use of its exhibition rooms for Mr. Davis' pictures. Mr. Davis is firm in his conviction, however, that the artists in art, those who paint according to the rules and regulations laid down by the accepted school, do not recognize the work of Leonard M. Davis, whose paintings of Alaskan scenery were placed on exhibition at Hubbard Memorial Hall yesterday, as belonging within the purview of their official notice.

Mr. Davis explains that the future American school of painting as interpreted by him will depend upon the development of spirituality and vibration of color for its results. His canvases are virile and pulsate with life and vigor. Many of them hardly look like paintings, as the genius of the artist has succeeded in perceiving the spectator that he is looking at nature itself rather than viewing her counterfeit on canvas. There are thirty-six paintings in the collection, and whether it be the gorgeous coloring and atmospheric effects of "Spirit of Winter," or the russets, purples and floating mists of "Mountain Sublimity," or the dazzling tones of some crystalline colored glacier, there is a lesson for the student, a revelation to the adherents of the old school and a treat for the connoisseur in every one of them.

His perspectives are wonderful. The mysterious color effects in the Alaskan glacier, which have baffled so many artists who have attempted to transfer them to canvas, are treated with much success by Mr. Davis in "Taku Glacier." The artist himself confesses that it is well-nigh impossible to express these effects with the old brush methods and declares the only solution to be the palette knife.

Mr. Davis went to Alaska in search of gold after he left Paris where he studied art. He found both gold and the inspiration for a wonderful collection of paintings. He spent fifteen years in Alaska, and the result is shown in his collection which Mr. Davis thinks the most important work he has done. It represents purely American scenes, executed by an American artist who succeeded in laying the foundation of a new world school of painting.
